"Tools often redefine a problem.... [T]echnologies are developed and used within a particular social, economic, and political context. They arise out of a social structure, they are grafted on to it, and they may reinforce it or destroy it, often in ways that are neither foreseen nor foreseeable.

–Ursula Franklin*, The Real World of Technology*

How would our relationship with governance change if we better understood its intricacies?